

Hi Corinne,

>
> You may not remember me, but I took two essay writing courses and a novel > study course through Webster's last year, and you taught me for all three > classes. I hope you do remember me (Britni from Saskatoon), because I > want to thank you for your great teaching and let you know how I'm doing.
>
> I just wanted to let you know, since I just finished my first year of > university, that I found all three courses to be extremely helpful for me > this year in my English class. I didn't know how to write essays before > taking the online courses, so I learned everything I know about essays > from you.
>
> My English professor is a wonderful lady, but definitely one of the harder > markers and she expects a lot out of her students. She told me, after the > midterm exam, that I wrote the best short essays in order to have the > highest mark in the class (I got 96% on the midterm, and got 85% on my > first essay). She called me "one of her best students" (she is a huge > supporter of homeschooling), and when I ran into her after the final exam, > she told me that out of her two English 110 classes, I ended up with the > second-highest mark out of all her 80 or so students (a final mark of 84).
> I think that this says a lot for the Webster's courses, and also for your > teaching. I would not have been this prepared if I hadn't taken those > three courses. So, I just wanted to say thank you. :-D
>
> I hope life has been well for you and your family. Has your son written > the SAT? I hope he has good luck with that if he hasn't yet.
>
> Thank you again for everything, and I hope this email doesn't seem too > random (even though it kind of is). I thought about you a lot during my > first year of university and how thankful I was to have taken those > courses from you. :-) I just wanted to express my gratitude. Sometimes > it seems like everything a person does goes unappreciated, so I wanted you > to know that you have helped me do so well in university English. And > many, many times throughout this year, I was grateful to you. Thank you.
>
> Sincerely,
> Britni

September 17, 2011